The Art of Peace

This interactive workshop will explore creativity as a tool for working against oppression. Through historical, global and personal case studies, participants will come to understand peace-building as an art that often calls for a creative approach. From engaging theatre and facilitated discussion to role-playing scenarios and interactive simulation games, participants will harness their own creative potential for a more peaceable world.

- explore the idea of peace-building as an art -form that requires a creative approach
- gain awareness of the work of various global artists/activists who use their passions for social justice
- be given the opportunity to practice non-violent responses to conflict, as well as act out responses through forum theatre

“We were so thrilled that Theatre of the Beat was able to join us once again for our High School Peace Day. [The facilitators] created unique and student-centred activities that kept students engaged as they explored art and peace. It was great to see students smiling, thinking, and working collaboratively!”
